GRANDPA'S HEAD REST.

Simple and Plain Enough to Be Enjoyed by the Old Gentleman. The dainty head rests that have been so pular recently are often confined ommons which he can be certain that to the chairs that are least in use. he visited is the Cambridge house of old | Their daintiness and the difficulty in days in Piccadilly, whither he was taken | washing them make them distinctly ornamental instead of useful, and the "grandfather" would be likely especial-

up" for his after-dinner nap in the rocking chair. But grandfather's white head must be pillowed. One of his granddaughters might make him a simple but very pretty head rest like the one in the accompanying sketch. A downy pillow is first made and cov ered, just big enough to fit the special chair it is to hang upon. Then a pillow case of dainty gingham is made in fine stripes or plaids and in the daintiest, softest colors obtainable, for it will wash like a pocket handkerchief and so need not be any of those de pressing colors that "won't show dirt." Let it be as pretty a gingham as the counters offer. The case is trimmed across the bottom with a full ruffle that curves round the lower corners and gradually merges into the sides. Four flat-very flatbuttons fasten the pillow into the cas ing and also add somewhat to its appearance. They will not come into contact with the head as they are down under the curve of the pillow, and so will not be likely to cause discomfort. Two strong loops of cord fasten the rest to the chair, and these may be of cotton cord whose colors go well with the gingham case. Then, when the whole needs washing one has only to slip out the pillow and send its covering just as it is to the laundry. When it comes back as good as new, the pil low is buttoned back into it and grandfather's chair is ready again to coax him into another nap.—Country Gentle-

Oil to Cleanse the Face. Oil, not water, should be used when you really want to clean your face Learn a lesson from the actresses. If an actress tried to wash with soap and water her nightly make-up from her face she would have no skin to speak of left in a week, to say nothing about a complexion. She never makes any such mistake. She removes her make-up with oil, usually and preferably cocoa oil. And she learns by experience to do the same thing when she wants to get rid of the grime of travel. Oil cleans the skip more thoroughly than soap and water, as you can thoroughly demonstrate after a journey or any such soiling experience. If you don't mind the abuse of your skin for once, just wash your face after the old fashion, as well as you can; then cover it with oil and remove the oil with a soft cloth. One look at the cloth will prove that the soap and water did not get it clean.

Probably there are no counterparts in existence which show so well the contour of an ocean liner under full head in midocean as viewed from the crosstrees of a mainmast. A fast-going passenger ship of modern build is narrow and long. It is designed to cleave the water like a knife and to offer as little resistance as possible to the water. One loses the comparative dimensions of a ship viewing it from on deck, as the width seems greater in comparison by reason of the length being broken by cabins, funnels, ventilaoats, and the various fittings which clutter the hurricane deck. Viewed from aloft the dimensions are better seen than from any other point. The shape is seen to be somewhat after that of a well-shaped cigar with the top of the boat looks like frosting on a cake

LOOKING AFT FROM ALOFT. ow. When a storm sweeps unbroken across the ocean and the ship is tossed like a cockle shell, then is the duty of the sailor one of danger and excitement. The motion of the boat, so severe at times as to make movement on deck a langer, becomes so great on the mast tops as to make the rigging and the imber of the masts strain and snap and cut the air like a whip. Often the if a slip should cause him to lose his precarious hold the ropes would save. him from a fall and a grave with. the fishes. On moonlight nights the sight from a masthead is beautiful. When the day is calm the view is much better, too, than from the deck. Where his lofty position can see the entire boat. There is no joy so keen to the sailor as an hour on the crosstrees when they dig, and so do not have to carry the day or night is fine. The reader may see part of the panorama of limitless waste which unrolls before his eyes, his feet. Besides, says the Chicago has to go along to carry forage for the Tribune, it is safer to look at these pictures than to view the reality. The Pressure of Wind. A wind moving at forty miles an hour exercises a pressure of nine pounds to
